

To whom it may concern

I have always been an active girl who wanted to experience facing new things in my life. During my elementary and high school, I attended several different sport classes such as swimming, running and tennis. This was how my life got entwined with sports.

When I turned 18 and graduated from high school, I had to choose a university major. Based on the advice from my school and my parents, I was urged to choose a "field which can be helpful to create a bright future for me in my country". So that was why I chose industrial engineering field to study in the university.

Considering my lack of experience and fears, I disregarded my own interests and choose this major and although I had good marks in this course, I somehow felt, it did not satisfy me completely.

When I was studying in the university, I got familiar with a sport called paddling, which is somehow similar to tennis which I used to play when I was younger. I felt an outstanding urge to devote a greater proportion of my time, learning how to play this sport and I spent three years of practicing this field. Right after this period, I was told by my coaches that it was recommended for me to take coaching classes as well since considering this fact this sport is getting popular in our country, learning this sport can make me amongst the pioneers in this field and that would be an advantage to take more important role in clubs and even the federation of this sport in the near future. I took this class and got a job in our club which even motivated me more to pursue my prospective career in this field.

It is needed to say that I am not planning to be just a sport coach or player, and considering the short span of professional life of a player, I made my decision to take an academic course in sport which enables me even more to be more distinctive amongst my future peers to take managerial roles in the near future. I even was promised to get a promotion in my job and salary in case I can take a university degree in the field of sports and that's the main reason I chose this field in the first place.

Amongst all the countries and options (including my own county), My choice of study was the UK since this country has always been known as one the pioneers in many sports and the education system in this field was expanded in a sufficient way to feed my urge. not to mention the language barrier which was an obstacle which eliminated many other countries as an option.

I was considering my options for the places to study, I chose your university since I have checked the university rankings, facilities and also the modules.

To sum up, I would be honored to be accepted in westminister university and I appreciate your kind consideration.

Yours truly
